Remarks: The means of watering cattle and sheep at this point has been the construction of small dams or levees as were required; causing the water to be reservoired and made available for stock and put to beneficial use. It is often necessary to reconstruct the dams or levees each year, they being easily destroyed by the stock present, the structure remained intact according to the material used in the construction.

Question 10 will be more properly answered by survey when weather conditions permit.
