To whom it may concern,

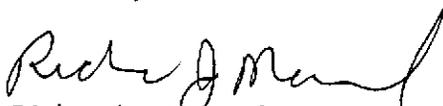

In response to your request regarding installation of a totalizing meter for the well on the farm I own, I was advised to write this letter of explanation.

The well in question has not been used since I purchased the property. There is no working electricity at the well site. The well is a supplement to irrigation water. The expense of installing power and a delivery system at this time is detrimental to our farming operation. If, in the future, we decide to invest to make the system operational, we would certainly install the required totalizing meter.

I am asking if it is necessary to install a meter under these circumstances.

Thank you for your consideration in this matter.

Sincerely, <

Richard J. Marvel
